XBOX 360 vs WII

During the past few years many companies have got into the so called “next gen” gaming consoles, two of the best selling ones are the XBOX 360, made by Microsoft and the sales giant, the Nintendo Wii.

Nintendo Wii

One of the worlds most loved consoles, the Wii introduced the idea that you should not control a game with a group of buttons, but with a little white stick that you wave in the air, and that always somehow ends up sticking out of your smashed TV.

The Wii continues many of Nintendo’s game sequels, like Mario Kart and Super smash bros, and yes most of the Wii’s games involve super Mario and his gang of overly colourful friends. The Wii’s game library is full of party games that usually involve racing your friends, beating up your friends and just generally playing against your friends, you may or may not like these games but some of them are quite good, like super smash bros.

If you want a console that is fun and easy to use get a Wii, if not read on.

Sports

Last week grades 4/5/6 went to District athletics to compete with the Schools in our district. We all did different events, including shot put,

XBOX 360

The best console for hardcore gamers, the 360's game library boasts such title as Halo 3 and Call of duty 4, 5 and 6 and many other great games. Almost all of the 360s games are first person shooters, which makes the 360 a somewhat not kid friendly machine. The 360 has some very good graphics with almost all of its games using the 720p HD standard. The 360 has some great games but the controller style and lack of non violent games turns a lot of people away.

Cars

The Audi R8 spyder should make it to Australia in 2010, and will be around the $400,000 mark – closer to pricing territories traditionally associated with Ferrari's, Lamborghini's and Aston Martin's.

The spyder has the same 386kW 5.2- litre v10 as the R8 5.2 FSI coupe that was released that debuted last month.

While the spyder version will be more expensive than the v10 coupe that is $352,000, it will be three kilometres slower than the v10 FSI coupe with a top speed of 313km, with the coupe at 316km. the spyders acceleration is slightly slower, with the coupe at an astonishing 3.9 seconds, and the convertible at a still-highly-respectable 4.1 seconds.

Fuel consumption has also risen with the spyder- by 0.2 litres per 100km-compared with the coupe: 14.9L/100km with the six-speed manual; 13.9L/100km with the automatic.

The fabric roof makes up a third of the convertibles 100kg weight gain over the coupe, but Audi say the way they used the carbonfibre for some body parts- including the roof storage lid- helped contain a bigger boost of the weight.

The roof can be lifted or closed in just 19 seconds at the flick of a switch. It can go up and down at speeds of 50km/h. the folding roof also has a heated glass window.

discus, long jump and all the running races Unfortunately, we had no winners ,but we did have a few people place 4th. It was a fun day and we all spent lots of money at the tuck shop.
